'Far Sleazier'

Editor:

I realize that there have been a lot of complaints about the Lucky Strike ad in the NCJ, however, compared to your cover story last week, "Carrots, Sticks and Jabs," the cigarette ad seems wholesome and honest by comparison. The ad at least contained a portion of the Surgeon General's warning, which was more science than your cover story contained. The ad's appeal is more honest too. It simply touts the products attributes. Nowhere in the ad do they smear non-smokers as radical, anti-social or irresponsible, nor does the ad suggest coercive measures be taken to force non-smokers to smoke Luckies.

In fact, your cover story was far sleazier and more one-sided than any cigarette ad I have ever seen. There's a place for sleazy, one-sided propaganda designed to marginalize and dehumanize people who oppose government policy. That place is North Korea, not the North Coast. Make no mistake about it, smoking cigarettes is bad for your health. Unfortunately, the same can now be

When the north fork of the Mad River was flooded in 1861, it created the 13-acre Blue Lake giving the town a resort atmosphere. In 1869 Clement Chartin purchased 160 acres along the lake to create a resort community for the growing timber industry's workers. He built a hotel, stables, a theater and a lakeside platform for dancing. Pictured here are early settlers to the town, the Douarin family in a canoe enjoying a day on the lake. # Deciphering the Gaps

Health Officer, Latinx providers talk COVID disparities

By Iridian Casarez

iridian@northcoastjournal.com

In an effort to address persistent disparities in COVID-19's impacts on the local Latinx community, Humboldt County Public Health Officer Ian Hoffman recently met with LatinoNet, a network of service providers like Open Door Community Health Clinics, Paso a Paso, Promotores, the Humboldt County Office of Education and Public Health that are dedicated to advocating for a healthier Latinx community in Humboldt County.

The meeting, Hoffman's first public discussion with the providers, focused on what can be done to address the disparities — which exist both in COVID-19 case rates and vaccination efforts and mirror state-wide and national trends — in the county's Latinx population.

In July, Humboldt County's COVID-19 dashboard highlighted the disproportionate COVID-19 case rates in the local Latinx and Hispanic communities, noting they accounted for 22 percent of COVID-19 cases while only making up 12 percent of the population. The disparity has only grown since and as of April 9, Humboldt County Latinx residents made up 25 percent of positive COVID-19 cases to date.

County vaccine data, meanwhile, has seen a similar trend, with Latinx county residents falling behind on receiving their COVID-19 shots. According to the Public Health dashboard, only about 10 percent of Humboldt's Latinx and Hispanic population are fully vaccinated, compared to 19 percent of the general population.

"We know that there is a disproportionate effect of COVID-19 in this community and that's why, from our standpoint in Public Health, and also personally, as a physician taking care of this community for a long time, it's important that we address this," Hoffman said.

Lara Weiss, a Public Health deputy branch director who also attended Friday's meeting, said LatinoNet invited Hoffman to speak with the group and offer an update on the pandemic and Public Health's efforts to provide equitable vaccine clinics. But Hoffman said the meeting was also an opportunity for him to hear from the providers about what barriers and gaps in care and outreach they were seeing.

Hoffman began his presentation talking about his background working with different Latinx communities in Santa Rosa and the Bay Area with organizations like La Clinica de la Raza in Oakland and Kaiser Permanente in San Francisco. He said he learned to give culturally sensitive care to members of the Latinx, Spanish-speaking community, which he said would transfer into a better understanding of how Public Health approaches culturally competent health policies.

Hoffman talked about Public Health's rollout of COVID-19 vaccine clinics, acknowledging the signup process has been confusing at times, with a shortfall of vaccine doses, exceedingly high demand and eligibility limitations. But Hoffman said Public Health's goal is to ensure vaccine equitability among those in the Latinx community and guarantee that any Latinx resident seeking a COVID-19 vaccine feels comfortable and confident before, during and after their appointment.

"We've taken some steps at Public Health to make sure that when a Spanish-speaking person needs a vaccine, that they feel comfortable and confident that their needs will be met and, most importantly, [provide] Spanish-language information," Hoffman said.

Public Health is working on a few new interventions, including sponsoring California Department of Public Health's "Let's Get to ImmUnity" integrated media campaign with both English and Spanish ads on local news channel 3, as well as planned mass vaccination events in more rural areas of the county with the help from Open Door.

And now that eligibility is open to all residents age 16 and older, Hoffman emphasized the importance of organizations serving the Latinx community helping to spread information on the vaccine rollout and the switch to the state's My Turn website (www.myturn.ca.gov). But the message Hoffman kept repeating was that the county's Joint Information Center (441-5000) is standing by and ready to take any questions, including those in Spanish, about the vaccine and vaccination clinics.

During the meeting, however, it became clear there may be a disconnect between county Public Health and service providers looking to direct clients and patients to accurate information about COVID-19 and vaccines in Spanish.

"I continue to hear that there's not clear and correct information in Spanish that people know where to access," LatinoNet board member Michelle Postman said, alluding to a survey by Jorge Matias, another LatinoNet board member, that found most Spanish-speaking local residents didn't know where to go for accurate COVID-19 information. "I feel like we try and we don't think that we're doing that but we don't know where the gap is, and I also know that Public Health is really stretched, there's only so much we can do, and so I'm just curious if there's one thing, one magical thing that can happen. Would it be like showcasing Latin[x] leaders in the community on commercials like, 'Hey I've got my shot and this is working,' or would it be to have a website? What would be the magical thing that you might spend time on to make things better if we had the capacity?"

Postman's comments led to a discussion about the best way to get information to the Spanish-speaking Latinx community, prompting Hoffman to stress that the JIC is dedicated to putting out a clear, conscious message in English and Spanish.

"All of the materials on [the JIC website, social media pages] have been vetted by Spanish speakers," he said. "They're scientifically accurate. They try to meet the cultural sensitivity that we talked about, as well. I would say that if we're going to put anything out there, that's the central message."

Hoffman urged the groups at the meeting to use the resources on the Humboldt Health alert website and promoted by the Joint Information Center and push them out to the Spanish-speaking community. And if there's one phone number the groups get to their clients in the coming weeks, he said it should be the JIC's: 441-5000.

In an email sent to the Journal, Matias, in his capacity as a LatinoNet board member, said his survey found most Latinx and

COVID-19 SAFETY: LIMITED CAPACITY, SOCIAL DISTANCING, MASK WEARING

Hispanic residents didn't feel they had clear and correct information in Spanish about who can and can't obtain the COVID-19 vaccine and that they felt they didn't have a specified place to call to find more information in their language. Many, Matias said, didn't feel had enough information about how effective vaccines are.

Many people, Matias added, are afraid of costs, side effects and needing more medical interventions due to possible side effects, while others worry they aren't eligible to receive the vaccine because of their documentation status. But Hoffman confirmed during the meeting that the only documentation those seeking a vaccine will need is any type of form with a name that matches the name on the appointment or a parental consent form for those 16 and 17 years old.

These, Hoffman added, are the types of questions that could be answered by the JIC.

The county JIC has been actively translating information into Spanish, including uploading social media posts in Spanish, but it seems they have yet to amplify those messages to community providers and advocacy groups in an effort to get that information to community members who may not follow county social media accounts or can't navigate the county's website.

Matias also told the Journal that there's a lot of information that spreads through social media that confuses Latinx and Hispanic residents, including misinformation and conspiracy theories, which was addressed during the meeting between LatinoNet and Hoffman.

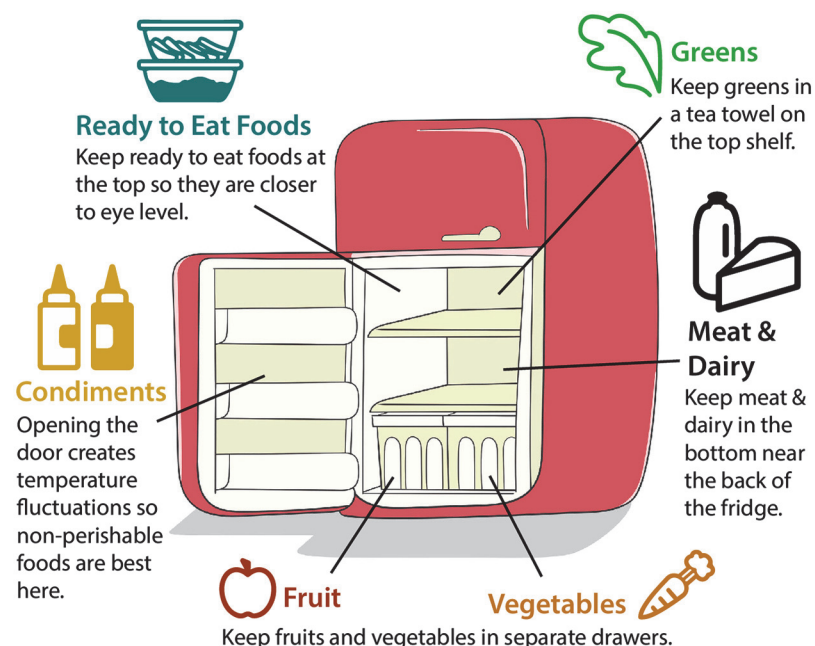

If Public Health hears of any misinformation or any disinformation spreading throughout the community, Hoffman said it would address it and correct it immediately. But he also cautioned there's a balance between correcting and amplifying.

Hoffman then asked attendees about the types of misinformation they were hearing and someone mentioned a conspiracy theory about the COVID-19 vaccine causing future fertility issues.

"That's one of the biggest pieces of misinformation that's got a stronghold in a lot of communities," Hoffman said. "There's absolutely no evidence that this vaccine has any effect on fertility."

NCJ NEWS

Nationwide, there have been reports of vaccine hesitancy in communities of color because of historical acts of genocide in healthcare settings, which was also mentioned by attendee Maria Ortega.

"I feel like all of these organizations and clinics and community organizations have a responsibility to be sensitive about that (fertility) issue and not dismiss anybody, because they're valid concerns, especially historically and worldwide there's been actual efforts to change communities of color and their population impacts," Ortega said. "Just be mindful about where they're coming from."

Hoffman agreed with Ortega about being mindful and understanding of where those concerns take root, noting the importance of recognizing the impact of historical events and communities' lived experiences in providing culturally sensitive care.

"These are difficult things to navigate exactly, and I think if those are the barriers that we're really seeing out there, they need to be addressed, obviously," Hoffman said. "But I'm not sure at this point exactly what all the barriers are ... My hope is that, mostly, that gap is because of eligibility and lack of vaccine and that, as we open it up more broadly like we are doing right now, and we have that language ability ... that we get those messages out there."

The reasons for the gaps in vaccine administration and infection rates may become more clear as the county moves into the expanded phase of its vaccination rollout but, presently, Hoffman urged providers and their clients and patients to look to the JIC for Spanish-language information about the COVID-19 virus and vaccines.

"Thank you so much for inviting me and talking with me," Hoffman said in Spanish, wrapping up the meeting. "I hope that we can do this again soon." ●

A System in Need of Upcycling

The California CRV system's problems continue to trickle down to Humboldt

By Iridian Casarez

iridian@northcoastjournal.com

Though some grocers are offering CRV in-store redemption services, Recology Eureka continues to see high rates of CRV material coming through curbside recycling.

When overwhelming demand closed Humboldt County's last California Refund Value redemption service at the Eureka Recycling Center last September, it left residents with few options to get their CRV deposits back. Under state law, it's now up to grocers and retailers to offer the service or face a $100 per day fee from the state, but finding a CRV in-store redemption service in Humboldt County has now become somewhat of a scavenger hunt.

The California Department of Resources Recycling and Recovery (CalRecycle) maintains a list of all the grocery stores and gas stations in each California county that offer CRV redemption services. Humboldt County's list contained 51 stores as the Journal went to press that are supposed to offer the service but some listed aren't accepting CRV at all, while others say they're still prepping to start the service. And many have set restrictions and limitations on the number of containers accepted and established limited CRV business hours.

For residents, the only real way of knowing which stores do, in fact, offer CRV redemption services is to call and ask whether they are accepting bottles and cans, and about the amount allowed. Safeway in Eureka, for example, limits redemptions to 50 clean bottles and cans for a maximum possible refund of $2.50 per day. And that's only when its CRV redemption services are open — Tuesday through Saturday from 7 a.m. to 1 p.m.

That isn't working for grocers and retailers, either, as they now must take on the responsibility of transporting CRV materials to market and refunding deposits to customers returning their containers, all on top of collecting point-of-sale CRV deposits for CalRecycle on the front end.

The burden has simply become too much for some. There are reports of gas stations in the area that began accepting CRV materials and returning deposits, but the demand was too high, and the gas stations became overwhelmed and found themselves hoarding more CRV material than they could transport to the nearest CRV recycling center, which is in Crescent City.

A gas station in Arcata the Journal contacted about accepting CRV materials asked not to be named in the article, with a manager saying she was worried about county residents swarming the business to redeem deposits. If demand becomes too high, she said, the business would just opt to pay the state's $100 per day compliance fee instead.

"It's unfortunate that small businesses have to take on the burden of taking CRV," Emily Manfredonia, the station's manager, said.

The same could apply to Eureka Natural Foods.

Graig Fillmore, the store's human resources administration officer, said ENF's Eureka store is preparing for in-store redemption services and is just waiting for answers from CalRecycle about exact rules of operating in-store CRV redemption service.

"We would really like to offer CRV services. We're all about recycling. But if demand gets too high, where we're backlogged [on CRV material] and the store isn't operational, we'll start paying the daily $100 fee," Fillmore said, adding that the health and safety of ENF employees comes first, noting that CRV crowds could complicate COVID-19 safety precautions.

Asked what Eureka Natural Foods plans to do with the CRV materials it collects, Fillmore said it plans to just put them into the business' curbside recycling bins to be collected by Recology, adding that transporting materials to Crescent City's Hambro Recycling Center or to a recycling market in Sacramento would add to the burdening costs. It's important to note that unlike CRV redemption centers and curbside haulers, grocery stores and retailers don't get subsidies from CalRecycle for operating in-store CRV recycling.

Manfredonia said the Arcata gas station will be taking CRV materials it collects to Hambro Recycling to recoup the CRV deposits taken out of its registers and given back to customers. But if there's too much material and that becomes burdensome, she said the station will put them in its curbside recycling bin.

Recology Eureka General Manager Linda Wise said the waste disposal company spends on average $850 to $1,500 per load to ship all recyclable materials (a portion of which are CRV) out of the area to market but costs all depend on where the materials are going and if Recology can take advantage of hauling efficiencies, like "haul backs" that allow the company to charge for hauling unrelated materials back to Humboldt County for other local businesses.

Recology Eureka, meanwhile, is still seeing more CRV materials coming into the curbside pickup stream with redemption centers closed and more people subscribing to curbside recycling in areas where it's not automatically included in garbage pick-up services.

Wise added that much of the CRV funds collected by Recology Eureka go directly back into subsidizing curbside rates but it's not as much as one might think.

"Recology puts any revenue we receive as far as curbside incentives toward curbside rates in our service areas, except for the case of Eureka," Wise said in an email to the Journal. "Eureka gets the payment and they put the funds toward recycling education and environmental projects. Curbside incentives do not amount to very much — usually $8,000 in Arcata (a year), for instance."

Wise added that buybacks haven't been profitable for a long time, which is why all of Humboldt County's CRV redemption service centers have closed.

Humboldt Waste Management Authority Executive Director Jill Duffy has said before that HWMA was not receiving enough money from the CRV recycling market to make up for the low CalRecycle subsidies, so it offset the costs with a different service fee, which was the only way the CRV redemption center stayed open. The formulas simply didn't support CRV, so the center's closure was inevitable.

"Buybacks have not been financially self-sustaining for a very long time or we would be seeing more crop up," Wise said. "Mostly, this is a result of the overuse of plastic single-use containers. They have a very, very low market value and their use creates less demand for aluminum, which drives that commodity lower, too."

Encouraging people to use reusable containers, clean their recyclables and stop buying single-use plastic would help, Wise said, but the solution to California's CRV crisis is at the legislative level.

There are currently a few bills that have been introduced in the California Legislature, including one by North Coast Assemblymember Jim Wood (Assembly Bill 1311) that would incorporate appointments into CRV service process. HWMA's Eureka Recycling Center had asked CalRecycle to allow appointments in an effort to navigate the high CRV demand that closed Broadway but was denied because the current law only allows walk-in service.

As Jeff Donlevy of Ming's Resources and Recycling told the Journal in January, the best way to fix the CRV crisis is to modernize the bottle bill formula, which is the same across the entire state and makes it hard for centers to make ends meet in rural areas. But a better solution may already be in play in Oregon and Michigan, where beverage manufacturers have more responsibility to making sure CRV cans and bottles are returned into the recycling stream.

And that's exactly what's written in California Senate Bill 38. Introduced by state Sen. Bob Wieckowski, the bill would result in "shifting more responsibility onto beverage distributors and increasing locations where consumers can return their containers" by July of 2024.

According to a press release from Wieckowski's office, "California now ranks third to last in redemption rates among bottle deposit states. Oregon, which has a stewardship model like the one S.B. 38 proposes, has a redemption rate of 86 percent and more locations to recycle, despite having just one-tenth the population of California."

In a March 11 HWMA board meeting, Duffy spoke positively about the bill.

"This is the one that actually has potential promise," she said, adding that it would probably be a bill that HWMA and "a lot of recyclers would end up supporting."

The following month, the board approved a motion to send out letters to Wood and North Coast State Sen. Mike McGuire asking them to support S.B. 38.

"HWMA supports amendments an overhaul to the Bottle Bill to restore CRV redemption opportunities to Humboldt residents," the letter states. "S.B. 38's Beverage Container introduced by Senator Wieckowski could bring necessary changes to California," the letter states.

Though many bills have been introduced, some with promising solutions, the legislative process can take months and, once something is passed, the implementation of the new law by CalRecycle, which will need to write regulations and requirements, could take another couple of years.

Until then, Humboldt County residents will still have little option of collecting their CRV and local grocers and retailers will be stuck between a burden and a fee. As such, the scavenger hunt will continue.

‘Please, Come Forward’

Mother offers $100K reward in quest to find justice for slain son

By Charmaine Lawson

views@northcoastjournal.com

I am Charmaine Lawson, mother of David Josiah Lawson, who was known by many as DJ. If this is your first time hearing my story, here is a brief summary of the facts leading to my son’s murder and how you can possibly help.

DJ was a sophomore attending Humboldt State University studying criminal law. On April 15, 2017, DJ attended a birthday party in Arcata. Lila Ortega who was also in attendance, misplaced her cell phone and began accusing several people of color of stealing it. Ortega then called her boyfriend Kyle Zoellner to come to the party to assist her.

When Zoellner arrived, Ortega demanded that DJ and his friends empty their pockets looking for the phone. When they said no, an altercation ensued and Nia Wilkins and Angelica McFarland sprayed them with a bear spray chemical agent and a fight broke out involving Zoellner and DJ. When a witness separated the two of them, DJ was covered with blood and had been stabbed several times. One of those stab wounds hit DJ in the heart and as he lay dying, Ortega was heard saying, “I hope that nigger dies!” DJ later died at Mad River Community Hospital.

Ortega would later find her phone after leaving the party.

When police arrived, Zoellner was questioned and arrested for the murder of my son. Police recovered the knife that killed my son at the scene and a DNA test later revealed that the only identifiable blood on the knife was that of Zoellner and DJ.

At Zoellner’s preliminary hearing, the Humboldt County District Attorney’s Office, whose job it is to represent the victim, appeared to intentionally present a case on behalf of the defense. This led to the release of the suspect Kyle Zoellner. A criminal grand jury was later convened to hear the case and, again, the district attorney’s office presented a case of self-defense for the suspect.

According to two members of the grand jury who reached out to me personally, they said 13 of the jurors had voted to indict Zoellner for murder, but former Deputy District Attorney Joel Buckingham led the jury to return with a decision of self-defense even though Zoellner himself never claimed self-defense.

District Attorney Maggie Fleming has stated that she will not present this case again without an eyewitness. Therefore, I am pleading with the community to come forward with video of the fight and my son’s stabbing that has been reported to exist, and for any eyewitnesses to the stabbing to contact me, Arcata Police Chief Brian Ahearn or your local police department.

If you know anything or anyone that can help this case, please come forward. I want to seek justice for my son. For the person who comes forward within the next 30 days and provides the evidence that leads to the arrest and conviction of my son’s murderer, I will award you $100,000.

DJ was my first born son, he was loved by his family and community. Not a day goes by that he is not missed. He deserves justice. DJ had a giving and loving heart, and in his memory we will be hosting the fourth annual coat drive at the Arcata Plaza on Saturday, April 17, 2021, from 2 to 5 p.m. I hope and pray to see you all there.

With love, Charmaine.

HumCo Fentanyl Overdoses Hit ‘Staggering’ Level

Humboldt County is in the midst of a surge of fentanyl-related overdose deaths, alarming local officials who have long braced for the powerful opioid’s impact on the North Coast.

Fentanyl has accounted for nearly 50 percent of Humboldt County’s alcohol and other drug (AOD) deaths so far this year, with five overdose deaths logged in March alone, according to data provided by the Coroner’s Office. And through the first three months of the year, 2021 had already matched the number of fentanyl overdose deaths recorded in Humboldt County in all of 2019 and was on pace to more than triple last year’s tally.

“The 2021 overdose rate of fentanyl here in the county is staggering,” said Humboldt County Sheriff William Honsal in an email to the Journal. “Our County Drug Task Force has responded swiftly to this sudden onslaught of dangerous fentanyl into our community.”

After being found in one overdose victim locally in each of 2016, 2017 and 2018, fentanyl was found in seven of Humboldt

County’s 71 (9.7 percent) AOD deaths in 2019, and nine of the 63 (14.7 percent) recorded in 2020, according to data provided by the Coroner’s Office.

Sheriff’s Lt. Shawn Sopoaga, who currently commands the task force, said fentanyl has quickly become a primary focal point for the task force, a team of investigators from multiple agencies that make high-end drug cases. The task force has made a series of large busts this year, starting back in January, when it seized a local record 4 ounces of fentanyl in a traffic stop of a Eureka man returning from San Francisco. Then in March, agents arrested several people connected to the alleged trafficking of 5,000 fentanyl-laced counterfeit prescription pills into Humboldt County from San Jose. Earlier this month, the task force reported arresting a Piercy man after finding him with 1.5 ounces of fentanyl.

“We are definitely reacting to what is quickly becoming one of the most influential narcotics in Humboldt County, Sopoaga told the Journal, adding that while urban areas and other parts of the country have been dealing with fentanyl for years, it’s fairly new to the North Coast.

While Fentanyl is tremendously addictive, it’s considered to be especially dangerous because of its potency. According to the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency, a lethal dose of heroin is generally considered to be roughly 30 milligrams, while a 3-milligram dose of fentanyl — which looks like a few grains of salt — is enough to kill an average adult male. That potency makes it attractive for drug traffickers, officials say, as a tiny bit can be used to stretch illicit street drugs or counterfeit pharmaceuticals. But if the drug isn’t blended sparingly, thoroughly and evenly, it can prove deadly.

The task force is seeing far more fentanyl circulating locally in counterfeit pills, Sopoaga said, which is a huge concern.

“It’s not like these counterfeit pills are being processed with quality control in a laboratory,” he said. “They’re very inconsistent. I think we have been seeing some overdoses as a result.”

Because fentanyl is so much more potent and consequently cheaper than other drugs, there have also been reports of non opioid counterfeit pills — like benzodiazepines, barbiturates and amphetamines — being cut with fentanyl, which can prove deadly for users who don’t have a built up opioid tolerance and are expecting to ingest something else. In some cases, it’s also unclear if street-level dealers are aware of what’s in the pills they’re selling.

“One of my biggest concerns is that our teenagers and young adults are taking pills from these dealers that are laced with fentanyl,” Honsal said. “The chances of overdose is very high. I urge the people of Humboldt County to not take any prescription pills that were not prescribed by a doctor and not purchased at a pharmacy.”

But Sopoaga also made clear that some users are very actively seeking out the more powerful opioid.

“The buzz on the street is people want fentanyl,” he said, adding that this will remain “the priority” for the task force. “It’s obviously the biggest issue just based on the deaths.”

Sopoaga said the task force is also working with the Humboldt County District Attorney’s Office and an association of state narcotics officers and has looked into the possibility of building a homicide case against a dealer linked to an overdose death.

Honsal said federal prosecutions are also possible.

“We are going after the dealers and suppliers of this poison,” he said. “We are working with both our state and federal law enforcement partners to hold those persons accountable that are pushing fentanyl in our community. Dealers can be charged by the state or federal government for distributing fentanyl resulting in overdose death. This is our No. 1 priority in the county right now. We have zero tolerance for fentanyl dealers.”

Tools in the Toolbox

Looking for ways to restore and protect the state's beleaguered bull kelp forests and in turn, red abalone stock

By Kimberly Wear

kim@northcoastjournal.com

The fragile future of the North Coast's beleaguered bull kelp forests is perhaps best captured in a single photograph taken off the Mendocino County coast last summer.

The image is at once hopeful and ominous: A tiny bull kelp stem with a single blade sways in the currents, reclaiming a spot on a once barren reef. But, looming large in the background, the shadowy figure of an urchin readies to seal the new start's fate.

For marine ecologist Tristin McHugh, who took the picture while diving a Noyo Harbor site that had recently been scoured of as many urchins as possible, the moment was emotional.

"Although we didn't see any giant bull kelp showing up, we did see a ton of tiny bull kelp starting to emerge very soon after we started," she said during a recent Noyo Center for Marine Science presentation on the pilot project she managed for the nonprofit Reef Check. "It was amazing seeing tiny, tiny bull kelp emerge."

The rapid decline of the North Coast's once thriving underwater forests has been well-documented in recent years, with the coasts of Mendocino and Sonoma counties bearing the brunt of what scientists describe as a "perfect storm" of changing oceanic conditions that ultimately decimated red abalone populations.

While ebbs and flows in the undersea ecosystem occur naturally, McHugh says the devastation wrought in those areas has been intense, with more than 95 percent of the waxy bull kelp canopies gone in less than a decade.

"It happened very quickly," she says.

The stage for the bull kelp's disappearance was being set back in 2013 when a still mysterious wasting disease began decimating starfish populations up and down the Western coast. Especially hard hit was the sunflower star — a voracious, 24-armed predator that can swallow a sea urchin whole — which has yet to rebound.

"The Warm Water Blob" — essentially a marine heat wave — entered the scene next, stressing bull kelp forests that are dependent on nutrient-rich cold waters to thrive, only to be followed by another round of high ocean temperatures with the "Godzilla" El Niño in 2015.

In the wake of these climate change-driven anomalies, a "negative feedback loop happened," McHugh says. Bull kelp forests were left in a weakened state and fewer new stocks settled onto the region's rocky reefs, removing vital food sources from the ecosystem.

That, she says, drove sea urchins — normally content to settle into nooks while feeding on drifting algae — to noticeably shift their behavior.

“They went from passive grazers to active grazers,” McHugh says.

At the same, with no sunflower stars to keep their numbers in check, the purple urchin population exploded and set its sights on the surviving bull kelp forests. In some places, they reduced once thriving marine ecosystems that boasted an array of sea life to wastelands known as “urchin barrens.”

Unable to compete against the seemingly unstoppable urchin force, red abalone starved, their numbers plummeting across a wide swath of coastline stretching from Sonoma to Southern Humboldt. The commercial red sea urchin fishery neared collapse, creating economic reverberations for the surrounding communities amid the ecological disaster.

After shuttering the recreational season in 2017 in a bid to save the prized shellfish — the California Fish and Game Commission recently extended the closure to at least 2026.

But cooperative efforts are underway to learn more about the workings of the complex bull kelp ecosystem while also bringing together a network of stakeholders, from scientists and government agencies to commercial urchin divers and nonprofits, to create a restoration framework.

The Noyo project — which saw six teams of commercial divers working in conjunction with scientists cull more than 26,000 pounds of the spiky urchins over the course of last summer — is one part of the puzzle.

Mike Esgo, the marine ecosystems program manager and tribal liaison for the state's Ocean Protection Council — which funded the removal project — described it as a pivotal component of a restoration toolkit the agency is putting together with the California Department of Fish and Wildlife as part of a statewide kelp restoration and protection plan.

The basic idea was to see whether bull kelp would return if enough of the urchin were taken.

“Having this pilot project, understanding the lessons learned, the best practices, how it might scale up, is just incredibly valuable from a management perspective, as far as how we are going to try to bring kelp back and protect the kelp that's still here,” he says.

And more ideas are on the table.

For McHugh, who recently transitioned to become Nature Conservancy's kelp project director, that includes looking at the potential of trapping urchin and leveraging the private sector to find pathways for using the catches — whether its fattening the urchins up on a farm to sell to market or using them as compost.

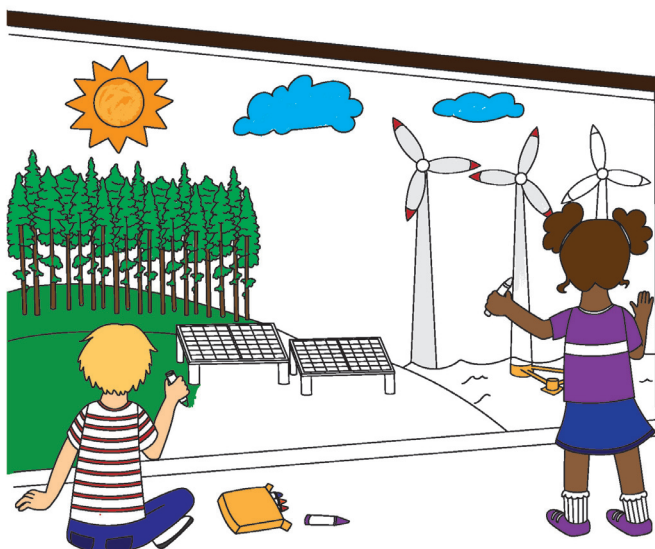

The hope, she says, is to find ways to “reset the ecosystem,” with a focus on “scalable solutions that benefit both humans and the environment.”

And Humboldt County may play an important role in those efforts, with preliminary plans underway to develop an experimental bull kelp nursery in Humboldt Bay.

NCJ ON THE COVER

Still early in the works, the idea is for the environmental nonprofit GreenWave and Humboldt State University — which are already working together to launch and scale regenerative ocean farms on a separate project — to partner on the endeavor with the Nature Conservancy to create a “stock of kelp” that could possibly be used in restoration efforts.

“This is novel in California,” McHugh said, “but it’s done all over the world. Kelp is incredibly important.”

Unlike its southern cousin the giant kelp, bull kelp grows as a single stalk and dies off each year — basically an annual marine plant rather than a perennial — making it more vulnerable to hungry urchin mobs that can hinder its ability to reestablish new growth.

So for McHugh, the bull kelp’s return to a barren space in Noyo Harbor raised a number of questions. Primarily, how old are the kelp seen there, where did they come from and where are their parents?

There’s evidence, she says, that bull kelp spores can live for a very long time, decades in some cases. But how long is still one of those knowledge gaps the Humboldt Bay project might help answer.

For the most part, the bull kelp here has fared better than other areas to the south.

According to Brian Tissot, director of the Humboldt State Marine Lab in Trinidad, the local coast has never really had the urchin barrens seen in other areas, like Mendocino, noting the situation along the state “really varies from site to site.”

“It still is a serious problem but we’ve been spared that; why, I’m not really sure,” says Tissot, who surveyed stretches of the local coastline over the summer as part of a state Marine Protection Areas monitoring project. “We’re a little bit colder. ... If anything, we’re seeing more of a recovery of bull kelp and that’s good news. Hopefully, that will continue.”

But even amid that bit of good news, Tissot and other marine experts, including McHugh, are still concerned. Overall, 2020 was a good year for ocean temperature, but the question is more when, not if, another marine heatwave will return.

Tissot notes that it was the warm water blob that really took a toll on the bull kelp by creating low-nutrient conditions.

“What we are seeing is a slow recovery,” he says. “It’s good to see those kinds of things coming back. ... The long-term prognosis is what I worry about.”

A typical bull kelp forest before the devastation brought by changing ocean conditions, the demise of starfish and the proliferation of urchins.
Courtesy of the California Department of Fish and Wildlife

McHugh agrees, saying projects like the bull kelp farm and efforts to minimize the grazing pressure from urchins may help put safety nets in place. “We’re thinking ahead, so when the next marine heatwave hits, we’re prepared and have tools,” she says, noting another big question is what the magnitude and frequency of the next warming event will be. “Some situations might need a wrench and, in other cases, a really big mallet.” ●

Pigs and Whiskey

Alchemy Distillery partners with the Sheriff's Work Alternative Program to offset waste, feed porkers

By Linda Stansberry
onthetable@northcoastjournal.com

It is, perhaps, a failure of our collective education that when we think of whiskey, we don't immediately think of rippling fields of wheat, rye, corn or barley. Those basic grains are the building blocks of most whiskeys. Alchemy Distillery, a young whiskey company based in Arcata, uses local wheat grown at the Hindley Ranch in the Mattole Valley. The harvested wheat is heated with water to convert its complex sugars into simple sugars that will be fermented into Alchemy's Boldt Bourbon or Cereal Killer. At this point, for most distilleries, the life of the wheat or rye is over. The spent grain is often composted. But for Alchemy, the grain gets a second life, going on to feed pigs at a farm in Fortuna, one that's run by the Sheriff's Work Alternative Program. "We started in 2015 and since the very first batch, we've donated all spent mash," says Amy Bohner, co-owner of Alchemy. "I've never had to pour it out in the field or dump it." Bohner and her crew initially donated the mash to local farms in the Arcata area but in 2020, they formed a partnership with SWAP, in part because the program had the resources to pick up the mash as soon as it was ready, but also because Bohner appreciated SWAP's mission.

SWAP is one of several correctional work alternative programs across the state. Started in 1984, it allows low-level offenders to work in lieu of incarceration. Traditionally, participants have cut or split firewood for senior citizens, or cleaned kennels at the Humboldt County Animal Shelter, but some also have the opportunity to work at the SWAP farm in Fortuna, helping raise pigs, chickens and cows. The livestock go on to help feed people in the wider community, including folks who are incarcerated.

"About two pigs a month go to the jail," says Ryan Craig, a senior correctional deputy who helps run the SWAP program. "We sell pigs to 4-H, Future Farmers of America. They go to the fair. We also sell pigs to the public."

The number of pigs varies, Craig says, from 20 up to 150 depending on the time of year. SWAP participants do the everyday cleaning and feeding for the pigs, and other jobs such as pulling weeds and cutting firewood. It's an eight-hour day, and the sheriff's office touts the program's effectiveness in reducing overcrowding in the jail and teaching participants marketable skills.

Craig and Bohner first got in touch around Thanksgiving 2020. Now a truck emblazoned with the sheriff's seal is a regular visitor to the distillery, pulling away with a sloshing tote of the still-warm grain. Bohner says it smells yeasty, like warm bread, and the alcohol content is negligible.

"The pigs seem to like it," Craig says, adding that they mix it with store-bought grain to meet the animal's nutritional needs.

Meghan Mott, a veterinarian with the California Department of Food and Agriculture who provides oversight of the SWAP farm's stock, says the donations are in line with best practices for animal nutrition, providing a "high protein, high fiber feed source."

"Distillers like Amy Bohner must dispose of their spent grains and the animals at the Humboldt County Sheriff's Farm are more than happy to help out," she wrote in an email to the Journal, adding the main risk to the animals is overconsumption. "[Brewer's spent grain] is highly palatable to most livestock, but excess consumption can lead to digestive problems. Farmers must be careful to limit access to this rich, delicious supplement, so generally it is used as a 'top-dress' to the animal's normal ration."

Bohner and her crew, whose dedication to reuse and zero-waste practices has extended to creating a whiskey from day-old Los Bagels bagels, say they plan to continue with the program. Since 2015, they've donated 49,390 gallons of spent grain back to local critters.

"We love the concept of locally grown grains coming full circle to become locally raised pork," says Bohner.

Mapping Seven Artists, Seven Paths

By Gabrielle Gopinath

artbeat@northcoastjournal.com

The exhibition Seven Artists, Seven Paths is back. The exhibition reopens this week at the Morris Graves Museum of Art after a months-long virtual interlude due to pandemic restrictions on social gathering. The seven Humboldt artists whose work it features — Leslie Anderson, Becky Evans, Mimi LaPlant, Sanderson Morgan, John Pound, Emily Silver and Karen Sullivan — are linked through mutual acquaintance as members of a circle that has met for dinner and studio talk every two months for a dozen years. As a celebration of a long-running artists' social network (not the online kind), Seven Artists speaks to the creative potential of the face-to-face social interactions we've all been waiting to resume.

"We're really different people but we can talk to one another easily," emeritus professor and volunteer curator Morgan said. "We're not interested in mutual criticism. What we're interested in is the life of the artist in the studio. When things are good, when things are bad — that's what we talk about." Members' processes differ vastly, he said, but the studio experience is what they have in common: "being alone, and doing all the things necessary for creation."

Drawing on his 25 years of experience as director of Humboldt State University's Reese Bullen Gallery, Morgan brought process into the conversation by inviting artists to show notes, sketches and studio ephemera alongside their finished works. The connections this organizational structure reveals are often illuminating.

Becky Evans' finely calibrated, hand-touched topographic maps of the forested ridges around Mount Shasta, conceived in relation to a poem by Jerry Martien, explore the possibility of a layered nature/culture laminate. This concept takes on 3-D form in a funnel-shaped sculpture made from a unique, hand-molded paper surface that is part wasps' nest, part USGS map.

Emily Silver's species lists, "intuitive maps" and watercolor sketches of the desert bristle with densely packed annotations of colors and landscape contours. The azure-into-crimson of the western skies over Joshua Tree National Park, painted here at sketchbook scale, relates to larger watercolors that make abstract those tequila sunrise hues and render them at a scale more reminiscent of the actual sky.

Mimi LaPlant's paintings interlace gestural brushstrokes, drips and smears with abstract motifs. Her large painting "Renewal" appears alongside a grid of smaller related studies. This hanging order makes it possible to appreciate the recurrence of certain motifs and hues, like the passages of intense spring green that flicker across several of these compositions and the scallop-like mandala forms that populate their surfaces.

Several of these artists used pandemic studio time to explore new media. Morgan, who worked with photographs in curatorial positions at the Berkeley Art Museum and the Reese Bullen Gallery, shows his own photographs here for the first time. His suite of prints documents the patina of historic locomotives at the Timber Heritage Association's Samoa roundhouse, using saturated color to draw out the oxidized layers that encrust these industrial age relics' weathered surfaces.

Leslie Price shows paintings made from feathered brushstrokes in closely modulated shades of off-white alongside a selection of the ceramic vessels he has begun making in the last few years. It's a treat to see how this veteran abstract painter turns his hand to a new medium, seeking an equivalent for the sense of harmony and balance that animates his canvases in vessel forms.

John Pound has been using computer code to make art since the 1980s. His images are made using programs he developed that position graphics on a field within certain parameters, creating randomized confrontations that look like the outcome of Mad Libs for digital images. This approach results in bright gradients populated with lozenge-shaped characters in absurdist interactions like the ones appearing in Pound's comic, "Electric President."

Karen Sullivan's drawings and paintings also feature images juxtaposed in weird ways — not through the service of an algorithm, but from a daily commitment to notate the movements of the ungarded mind. During the pandemic she's kept her creative process close to home, making daily "telephone doodles" on notes that she later arranges into plastic folders. "Yellow Falls: In the Time of Covid" drapes those notes across the gallery wall, creating a gridded arc that looks a bit like a waterfall running the dull bureaucratic yellow of the basic Post-It note. The shade is comically, unavoidably urinary in this context; the work as a whole is a cheery taking of the piss with regard to the regional tendency to enshrine a certain kind of work — uncomplicated art that gestures enthusiastically toward nature's magnificence.

This exhibition's emphasis on preparatory work speaks to the curator's documentary motivation. Morgan said that he has long taken an interest in "creating a historic record for this little art world we have here; recording what we do and why we do it." He's interested in the networks that have made it possible for these Humboldt artists to thrive, despite the challenges that go along with choosing to base a serious art practice in a remote region that's long on natural splendor, rich in a violent history that cuts close to the bone of the American project, and yet short on capital, institutional support, patrons and exhibition opportunities.

Exhibition staging connects viewers to what happens in these artists' studios but the face-to-face social network that has linked these artists for the past dozen years remains, perhaps inevitably, more a matter of telling than of showing. Reading these artists' statements and viewing their sketches, we connect the dots to hypothesize how individual and group affinities may have shaped the work.

To connect the dots is also to make a kind of map; mapping, Morgan said, is part of what he hopes this exhibition will accomplish. This exhibition maps a single artists' circle. A diligent curator could generate a dozen such parallel micro-histories in other local circles. Then, by connecting all those dots, a viewer might approach an understanding of the complex networks underlying the various forms of this region's — any region's — art.

Morgan was quick to acknowledge the practical difficulties of such endeavors. He brought up Jorge Luis Borges' short story "On Exactitude in Science," about a fictional empire whose rulers have developed cartography so exactly that they are able to make a map the exact size and dimensions of the empire itself. You might think such peerless location services would ensure the regime's longevity but, in fact, decline ensues when future generations lose interest in mapmaking and the massive maps decay, causing so many impediments that the empire collapses into ruin.

"Unfolding the Map, Inverted Mount Shasta with Cumulus and Lenticular clouds," 2020, by Becky Evans. Courtesy of the artist

This absurdist reduction reminded me of Google Earth and how inhumanly unmanageable that map is at its scale — as opposed to, say, the manageable hugeness of the New York City panorama commissioned by Robert Moses for the 1964 World's Fair, the one Fran Lebowitz bestrides Gulliver-like in Martin Scorsese's 2021 documentary Pretend It's a City. The medium is the message, as all the Boomers out there know: As the machine networks connecting us evolve, the nature of our communication changes in response. If Morris Graves were alive today, instead of writing newsy longhand letters that later generations could comb for insight into his life and art, wouldn't he be sharing fruit emoji and cat memes like the rest of us?

The social cartographer's task is not easy, Morgan agreed, especially not when the terrain in question is an artists' circle. We're talking about a gossamer network constituted through some multi-branched social connections and experiences over time, one that can be described but never reproduced in its totality. The challenge makes a regional exhibit of this kind especially significant. Seven Artists bears witness to a creative social network that has persevered longer than most, through trying times, held together by the delicate yet durable filaments Morgan describes as "mutual respect and delight in one another's company." ●

"Seven Artists, Seven Paths" reopened to visitors will stay open through May 23 at the Morris Graves Museum of Art.

NCJ TROPHY CASE

Kids and Sports

Why don't they play like they used to?

By Rod Kausen

trophycase@northcoastjournal.com

Plenty of adults label this generation of kids as lazy and spoiled. That is what older generations do: label the younger generations as not as tough as they were — walking to school, part time jobs, toeing the line and playing more sports.

By one barometer concerning sports, the National Alliance for Youth Sports concludes that currently about half of kids quit sports by the time they turn 11 and about 70 percent quit by the time they reach 13. Those statistics point to a story but don't address the causes.

Youth sports can develop physical fitness, teamwork, success, the ability to deal with and overcome defeat, and, of course, provide an alternative to the internet. In our society, fewer kids participate in sports now than they did in the past. There are rising rates of obesity and consumption of junk food, which can be traced to bottom-line issues based on systemic variables in our culture. But it is not so simple as chalking it up to kids just being lazy.

The COVID-19 nightmare has had a huge impact. For example, the Fortuna Major League Little League season had a smaller number of kids try out for teams this year. Many did not have the skills needed after a year of inactivity and so were sent to the younger team's league. There will be only four teams this year — one from Ferndale and three from Fortuna — after decades of up to eight teams.

Coaches at the high school level are finding fewer students than expected interested in playing in these shortened seasons with a few exceptions. Everyone was hopeful there would be lots of enthusiasm for these seasons of sports after a year of pent up kids but that has not been the case.

My next-door neighbor is a sophomore in high school. He wants to play basketball for the shortened four-week season this year but the basketball season will overlap his baseball season by a week, and the last two weeks will be during his summer vacation and a planned family trip. Another year of lost skills.

The effects of COVID-19 might be felt long term. Like many, I am guilty of apathy and inactivity during this pandemic. It can become ingrained. Getting into competitive shape is a lot of hard work. For the youth, loss of interest has been building for a while and the pandemic probably exponentially accelerated it. My column is about sports but there is an overlap with clubs, plays and band. The lost time socializing in groups will be taxing.

The primary concern among experts is kids feeling sports are not fun. As they get closer to high school, the system has become focused on more competitive players. My coaching friends around the North Coast Section have been talking about it for years.

A major shift has been a clear push toward specializing. Coaches are both witnesses to and sometimes causes of this movement. The statistics show most kids who specialize and only practice one sport all year do not significantly improve in that sport. Lost are the lessons of honing other skills, developing other muscle groups, learning to play with a variety of team members, finishing a task and other benefits that come with diversified training.

The idea of picking one sport and specializing might work for some, but the underlying message can be, "If I am not the best, I have failed." A girl who specializes in soccer and does not make the prestigious summer travel squad may think there is no point to committing to it and quit the sport.

Those kids who hang in there can feel parents and coaches are disappointed if they have not excelled and "won," concerned more with the score and the outcome. Development of skills and having fun are not prioritized. A 13-year-old struggling with grades, school standards, esteem, sexuality and a host of influences can certainly be swayed by a friend who walks away from sports.

Many families cannot afford to have their child focus on sport stardom. Equipment, year-round fees, camps, travel for select teams and coaching are expensive. Low-income and single-parent families are often shut out. There are organizations that will help, but it's harder for kids growing up on the wrong side of the financial tracks.

We cannot look at contemporary youth society without coming back to the impact of social media, smart phones and online gaming. According to Pew Center's Internet Research Study, most kids in the U.S. have their first cell phone by the age of 12, 92 percent of teens are online every day and 24 percent are online almost constantly.

If a 10-year-old boy plays center field, getting a couple chances to field a ball in a game and maybe three at bats a game, he might get bored. If he is not particularly good anyway, why not opt for staying home playing Fortnite with the constant action of a video game in which his skill level is high and rewarding?

"Little League parent syndrome" is the term sports psychologists use to describe the intense need to see one's child gets on the best teams and spends hours traveling to games and clinics. Superimposing a parent's own ego and desires can also lead to kids not having as much fun. If you start pushing your kids at the age of 5, burnout, boredom, guilt and injuries from pushing too hard are possible outcomes. On the flip side, the 10-year-old that wants to start a sport may feel displaced and behind before even trying.

Ways to counteract these issues include pointing kids toward activities such as swimming, karate and gymnastics to build coordination, not the use of equipment. To avoid burnout, instead of playing more than one sport per season, kids could focus on different sports in different seasons. Having your kid be the best at age 8 often eliminates the possibility for them to be the best at age 15.

The pressure to win and excel at the age of 7 doesn't compare to having fun and connecting with parents and coaches.

My nostalgic thoughts turn to questions like: What happened to the games in the street, the bicycle and coming in at dark? What about shooting hoops just for fun and playing with new friends in the neighborhood?

Try not making them little soldiers in the sport you stayed in because it was fun for you. Try not reliving every play on the way home. Try saying, "Wow, I love watching you play."

Brookings Kicking Out Limits of Rockfish and Lingcod

By Kenny Priest

fishing@northcoastjournal.com

Wesley Brown, of Carson City, Nevada, holds the limit of lingcod he recently caught aboard the Nauti-Lady of Brookings Fishing Charters. He was using a P-Line Lazer Minnow tipped with squid.

While we wait for the rockfish season to open in the Northern Management area, which includes Eureka, Trinidad and Crescent City, there's a pretty good alternative right across our northern border. Rockfish and lingcod season is open year-round out of Brookings Harbor, and the last couple months have produced some excellent fishing opportunities. When the weather has permitted, the lingcod bite has been better than average, with limits common for private and charter boats. The rockfish bite has been equally good. "The lingcod bite, when the ocean has been flat, has been wide-open," said Andy Martin of Brookings Fishing Charters. "The Bird Island and House Rock areas have been best." When conditions keep the boats closer to the harbor, there's still good fishing available. "Close-in fishing also has been good, with easy limits of rockfish just past Chetco Point," added Martin. Brookings Harbor features an excellent launching facility with self-payment, courtesy dock, freshwater boat rinse and a large fish-cleaning station. The general marine daily bag limit is six fish per angler per day, along with two lingcod 22 inches or larger. Visit www.myodfw.com/sport-bottom-fish-seasons for a complete list of bottom fish regulations.

Marine forecast

Ocean conditions are shaping up nicely for the weekend. Friday is calling for north winds to 5 knots and northwest waves 2 feet at six seconds and west 4 feet at 12 seconds. Saturday is calling for winds out of the north 5 to 10 knots with 3-foot swells at six seconds out of the northwest and west 4 feet at 12 seconds. For an up-to-date weather forecast, visit www.weather.gov/eureka/ or www.windy.com.

The Beach/Jetties

Howling winds over the weekend made for some tough fishing conditions off the beach and jetties. The best option was the mouth of Elk River inside Humboldt Bay for redbait perch. It's one of the few locations not affected by heavy winds. The fishing was good this weekend, with some limits reported. Conditions look excellent through Saturday.

"Critically Dry" year designation for Trinity River

According to a press release issued by the Bureau of Reclamation on April 9, the lack of precipitation and snowpack in the Trinity Mountains this winter means the flow schedule for 2021 is scaled to a "critically dry" water year for the Trinity River. Critically dry is one of five water year types used by the Trinity River Restoration Program to decide how much reservoir water will be released in support of the program's goals to improve habitat for anadromous fish — fish that migrate to fresh water from salt water to spawn — like salmon and steelhead. This year marks the third critically dry year in the last five for the Trinity watershed. This year's flow schedule will begin April 16. Key dates and flow releases are:

April 16-17: Increase daily average flows from 300 cubic feet per second to 1,300 cfs
April 21: Decrease flows to 500 cfs
April 23: Increase flows to 1,500 cfs
April 28: Increase flows to peak release of 3,550 cfs

Two additional flow increases to 1,950 cfs on May 6 and 1,600 cfs on May 28 are scheduled before flow decreases to summer baseflow (450 cfs) on June 18, which continues until Sept. 30. Visitors near or on the river can expect river levels to increase during the flow releases and should take appropriate safety precautions. Landowners are advised to clear personal items from the floodplain prior to the releases. A schedule of daily flow releases is available at: www.trrp.net/restoration/flows/current/.

The Rivers:

Reminder: The South Fork Eel, Van Duzen, Mattole, Mad, Redwood Creek and Chetco rivers all closed to fishing March 31.

Lower Rogue

The slow spring salmon fishing on the Rogue continued over the weekend, prompting some guides to start canceling trips, according to Martin. "Very few hatchery springers are being caught. The other Southern Oregon Coast rivers are closed until late May," added Martin.

Eel (main stem)

As of Tuesday, the main Eel dipped under 1,800 cfs on the Scotia gauge. The river is clear and the fish will be holding in the deeper slots. There should be quite a few steelhead making their way downriver, though the fishing pressure has been light. The main stem Eel to the South Fork is open all year. Only artificial lures with barbless hooks may be used from Apr. 1 through Sept. 30.

Neither snow nor rain nor heat nor gloom of pandemic stays Humboldt State University's film students from promoting the art of film. Year after year, the oldest student-run film festival in the world keeps rolling. This year, the Humboldt International Film Festival celebrates its 54th year with four nights of independent films, April 21-24. In addition to the narration, animation, experimental and documentary categories, this year's festival features two spotlight programs: solidarity with Black Lives Matter and social justice issues, and self care and wellness amid COVID-19. Get an all-access virtual film pass for $50 ($25 students) or drop $10 per movie ($5 students). See www.hsufilmfestival.com/tickets for ticket and schedule details.

WANTED: Volunteers who want to make a difference

Long Term Care Ombudsmen Volunteer Program

Become a highly trained advocate for residents living in Skilled Nursing Homes and Residential Care Facilities for the Elderly. Ombudsman advocate for residents of long term care facilities in Humboldt and Del Norte counties; we empower those who are unable to protect their own rights, we assist those who are unable to speak for themselves and we educate the community about the rights of the elderly. Ombudsmen are State-certified volunteers trained to objectively investigate complaints and solve problems for residents. The Ombudsman makes regular visits to the long term care facilities to monitor the quality of care provided to these residents. When necessary we work closely with regulatory agencies and local law enforcement agencies. We ask that volunteers commit to visiting their assigned facilities a minimum of twice per month for the Skilled Nursing facilities and minimally once per month for the Assisted Living facilities. The schedule is set by the volunteer. There is mandated 36 hour classroom/ home study training along with an additional 10 hours working in the facility with a senior Volunteer.

Funny Running into You

Thunder Force, Psycho Goreman and Shiva Baby

By John J. Bennett

screens@northcoastjournal.com

THUNDER FORCE. Melissa McCarthy had already established a significant CV as a character by the time I took notice. That was 2011, the movie was Bridesmaids (of course) and I doubt I was the sole latecomer to her fan club. She made an indelible impression as the irrepressible, sweetly unhinged Megan, standing out in a movie that became a star-making phenomenon. If her name is attached, I'll watch it eventually. This has created a challenging, if not complex paradigm, because I love McCarthy best when the gloves are off and the comedy becomes a street-fight — in the moments of perceived loss of control, she approaches the sublime and it is impossible not to laugh. Her breakthrough was defined by this tonal violence; even her quietest moments suggest the coming of thunder. It is likely too much to ask of any performer to sustain that velocity throughout a whole performance, much less an entire career; such is the conundrum of an inimitable, self-defining breakthrough. I want to see McCarthy raging, balls to wall, a comedic destroyer of worlds. She doesn't always do that.

Thunder Force, written and directed by frequent collaborator (and life partner) Ben Falcone, gives us McCarthy in a heightened universe and a perplexingly muted, more accessible mode. It's enjoyable and it boasts a pretty remarkable cast. But for its occasional suggestions of an unchecked thing that might have been,

I find it frustrating.

Set in Chicago, the movie posits a world terrorized by Miscreants, sociopaths imbued with superpowers by some sort of preternatural global event in 1983. Among the early victims of the scourge were the scientist parents of Emily Stanton — played as time passes by Bria Danielle Singleton, Tai Leshawn and, in adulthood, Octavia Spencer — a bookish kid who vows to continue their research and find a way to confer superpowers onto non-murderers. Her dedication to this path leads, in adolescence, to her parting ways with rough-around-the-edges best friend Lydia Berman (Vivian Falcone, Mia Kaplan, McCarthy). They remain estranged until the night of a high school reunion, when Lydia pushes her way into the offices of Emily's thriving tech company and accidentally gives herself a superhero injection. Crime-fighting and rekindling of friendship commence.

The movie is sweet, ultimately, almost saccharine. Bobby Cannavale and Jason Bateman stand out as villains, but it's almost as if they're in much goofier, more adult storyline altogether. The moments of absurdity and comic asides can't quite elevate the rest of the material, which is too safe and wholesome — not always a bad thing — to bear revisiting. PG13. 106M. NETFLIX.

PSYCHO GOREMAN. From a different part of the cinematic universe, one more frequented by iconoclasts and cinematic weirdos, comes Steven Kostanski's version of an '80s cult-horror-sci-fi mash-up, replete with insane make-up, winking asides and hilariously gruesome practical effects.

After Mimi (Nita Josee-Hanna) defeats older brother Luke (Owen Myre) in a game of Crazy Ball (copyright Mimi), he must dig his own grave and be buried alive. In the process, he discovers the tomb of an ancient, demonic space-warrior. Previously known as the Archduke of Nightmares (Matthew Ninaber, voiced by Steven Vlahos) and imprisoned after an intergalactic campaign of untold carnage, he was condemned to spend eternity entombed behind Luke and Mimi's house. Best laid plans. After liberating the beast and renaming him Psycho Goreman, Mimi takes control of the talisman containing his power and becomes his master. What ensues might be described as Stranger Things without the pretentiousness, filtered through the whole Troma catalog and Peter Jackson's Bad Taste (1987). (Forgive the unavoidable comparison.)

While not exactly in my top-five range, genre-wise, Psycho is clever, self-aware and well-enough executed to deserve a mention. It will be "too stupid" or "too bloody" for many, but those are among its many charms: It is pure entertainment from a line that seldom gets enough credit for its lasting influence. NR. 95M. AMAZON.

SHIVA BABY is a substantial, troubling, shockingly fully-formed debut from a very young creator. Writer-director Emma Seligmann is, I believe, still in her early 20s and this makes me optimistic as well as old and unaccomplished.

Reluctantly attending memorial services for a distant relative, Danielle (Rachel Sennott) is first troubled by the presence of her estranged best friend/girlfriend Maya (Molly Gordon). They've drifted apart on difficult terms and Danielle is shamed by her own lack of direction in life, especially set against Maya's acceptance to law school. Bad enough but then Danielle's, well, sugar daddy Max (Danny Deferrari) arrives, with his seemingly perfect wife (Dianna Agron) and baby daughter to follow. Mortification abounds.

Seligmann's most impressive touch here is to render slapstick comedy as horror, establishing a precarious tone of claustrophobia and anxiety made more contrived by each one of Danielle's actions and interactions. She also understands that sometimes less is more, editing the movie down to a lithe, perfect 77 minutes and setting it all in one location over the course of one of those afternoons we've all thought would never end. This is intelligent, economical, exceptionally well-cast moviemaking, hopefully the beginning of a successful and fulfilling career. NR. 77M. AMAZON. ●

A node in the Bitcoin network is usually a “mining farm,” like this one (in Iceland, taking advantage of cheap geothermal and hydro power), in which thousands of ASIC (application-specific integrated circuit) computers compete in a worldwide lottery to find the winning Bitcoin “hash.”

Cryptocurrency and the Blockchain

By Barry Evans

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

Cryptocurrency, especially the largest, Bitcoin, is often touted as “new gold,” a way of holding wealth independent of banks. I discussed cryptocurrency briefly a few years ago (“Cash, Plastic or Bitcoin?” May 5, 2016), when I compared explaining Bitcoin to the challenge faced by Marco Polo when he tried to tell 14th century Venetian city fathers about the paper money (fiat) he had seen in China. Here’s my Marco Polo explanation of Bitcoin.

What is Bitcoin?

- A decentralized peer-to-peer electronic cash system, unlike fiat (“let it be done”) money such as dollars, where a central authority — in this case the U.S. government — promises that pieces of green paper without any intrinsic value are, in fact, valuable.

- A monetary system immune from inflation, since there will never be more than 21 million Bitcoins (unlike fiat money, which can be printed and hence devalued, according to the whim of the government)

- Digital currency, in the same way your credit card represents digital currency, except without any middleman or central authority like Visa or your bank or the Federal Reserve

- A democratic payment system that offers a way for the nearly 3 billion “unbanked” people in the world to enter the economy and easily trade services and goods

- The financial equivalent of email
- A ledger (aka blockchain) containing the entire history of Bitcoin transactions

What do you mean “ledger?” Bitcoin’s ledger is the record of all transactions since its inception in 2009. The ledger is anonymous, decentralized and transparent, with thousands of identical copies maintained and constantly updated by a global network of nodes. It can only be added to, not edited. The ledger is broken down into blocks, each block containing the record of approximately 2,400 new transactions together with proof, or “hash” (see below) of the previous block. Hence the Bitcoin ledger is also called the “blockchain.”

How does it work? New transactions are constantly added to the blockchain at an average rate of one block every 10 minutes. To verify that a new block is a legitimate record, so-called “miners” essentially engage in a lottery, searching by trial-and-error (using powerful custom-built computers) for the correct “nonce,” the number that will return a singularly unlikely result. Once found, the winning miner broadcasts it to thousands of rival nodes for validation, resulting in the newly verified block being added to the chain. The miner’s effort, or “proof of work,” is rewarded with 6.25 Bitcoins per block (currently about $350,000). The reward is halved every four years.

What’s “a singularly unlikely result?” An arithmetical process (an algorithm known as SHA-256) is applied to the 2,400-odd new transactions, plus the hash of the previous block, plus the nonce being checked. The output (hash) is a run of 256 hexadecimal (base 16) numbers. A miner knows they’ve hit the jackpot when their hash starts with a certain number of zeros, currently 19. That number self-adjusts to keep the mining rate steady: The more miners, the greater difficulty. To give some idea what’s involved, the challenge with 17 initial zeros is equivalent to finding a particular grain of sand out of all the grains of sand in the world (about  $10^{20}$ ).

What’s the point of miners? Thousands of miners around the world validate transactions and keep the blockchain secure by consensus, verifying everyone else’s ledger for discrepancies or fraud about every 10 minutes. Instead of a central authority, thousands of individuals are guaranteeing the integrity of the system. ●

Barry Evans (barryevans9@yahoo.com) believes Bitcoin is one of the most important inventions of our time.

Free Will Astrology

Week of April 15, 2021

By Rob Brezsny

freewillastrology@freewillastrology.com

ARIES (March 21-April 19): "Today I feel the whole world is a door," wrote poet Dennis Silk. In a similar spirit, 13th-century Zen master Wumen Huikai observed, "The whole world is a door of liberation, but people are unwilling to enter it." Now I'm here to tell you, Aries, that there will be times in the coming weeks when the whole world will feel like a door to you. And if you open it, you'll be led to potential opportunities for interesting changes that offer you liberation. This is a rare blessing. Please be sufficiently loose and alert and brave to take advantage.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Taurus philosopher Ludwig Wittgenstein was called a genius by Nobel Prize-winning author Bertrand Russell. His Philosophical Investigations was once voted the 20th century's most important philosophy book. Yet one of Wittgenstein's famous quotes was "How hard it is to see what is right in front of my eyes!" Luckily for all of us, I suspect that won't be problem for you in the coming weeks, Taurus. In fact, I'm guessing you will see a whole range of things that were previously hidden, even though some of them had been right in front of your eyes. Congrats! Everyone whose life you touch will benefit because of this breakthrough.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Why don't rivers flow straight? Well, sometimes they do, but only for a relatively short stretch. According to the US Geological Survey, no river moves in a linear trajectory for a distance of more than ten times its width. There are numerous reasons why this is so, including the friction caused by banks and the fact that river water streams faster at the center. The place where a river changes direction is called a "meander." I'd like to borrow this phenomenon to serve as a metaphor for your life in the coming weeks. I suspect your regular flow is due for a course change—a meander. Any intuitive ideas about which way to go? In which direction will the scenery be best?

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Cancerian poet Denis Johnson eventually became a celebrated writer who won numerous prizes, including the prestigious National Book Award. But life was rough when he was in his twenties. Because of his addictions to drugs and alcohol, he neglected his writing. Later, in one of his mature poems, he expressed appreciation to people who supported him earlier on. "You saw me when I was invisible," he wrote, "you spoke to me when I was deaf, you thanked me when I was a secret." Are there helpers like that in your own story? Now would be a perfect time to honor them and repay the favors.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): What do you believe in, exactly, Leo? The coming weeks will be a fine time to take an inventory of your beliefs—and then divest yourself of any that no longer serve you, no longer excite you, and no longer fit your changing understanding of how life works. For extra credit, I invite you to dream up some fun new beliefs that lighten your heart and stimulate your playfulness. For example, you could borrow poet Charles Wright's approach: "I believe what the thunder and lightning have to say." Or you could try my idea: "I believe in wonders and marvels that inspire me to fulfill my most interesting dreams."

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Virgo poet Charles Wright testifies, "I write poems to untie myself, to do penance and disappear through the upper right-hand corner of things, to say grace." What about you, Virgo? What do you do in order to untie yourself and do penance and invoke grace? The coming weeks will be an excellent time for you to use all the tricks at your disposal to accomplish such useful transformations. And if you currently have a low supply of the necessary tricks, make it your healthy obsession to get more.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Kublai Khan, ruler of the Mongol Empire and China in the second half of the 13th century, kept a retinue of 5,000 astrologers on retainer. Some were stationed on the roof of his palace, tasked with using sorcery to banish approaching storm clouds. If you asked me to perform a similar assignment, I would not do so. We need storms! They bring refreshing rain, and keep the earth in electrical balance. Lightning from storms creates ozone, a vital part of our atmosphere, and it converts nitrogen in the air into nitrogen in the ground, making the soil more fertile. Metaphorical storms often generate a host of necessary and welcome transformations, as well—as I suspect they will for you during the coming weeks.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): "Unexpressed emotions will never die," declared trailblazing psychologist Sigmund Freud. "They are buried alive and they will come forth, later, in uglier ways." I agree, which is why I advise you not to bury your emotions—especially now, when they urgently need to be aired. OK? Please don't allow a scenario in which they will emerge later in ugly ways. Instead, find the courage to express them soon—in the most loving ways possible, hopefully, and with respect for people who may not be entirely receptive to them. Communicate with compassionate clarity.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Sagittarian author Cristin O'Keefe Aptowicz wrote a poem entitled "Not Doing Something Wrong Isn't the Same as Doing Something Right." I propose that we make that thought one of your guiding themes during the next two weeks. If you choose to accept the assignment, you will make a list of three possible actions that fit the description "not doing something wrong," and three actions that consist of "doing something right." Then you will avoid doing the three wrong things named in the first list and give your generous energy to carrying out the three right things in the second list.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): In the past few weeks, I hope you've been treating yourself like a royal child. I hope you've been showering yourself with extra special nurturing and therapeutic treatments. I hope you've been telling yourself out loud how soulful and intelligent and resilient you are, and I hope you've delighted yourself by engaging with a series of educational inspirations. If for some inexplicable reason you have not been attending to these important matters with luxurious intensity, please make up for lost time in the coming days. Your success during the rest of 2021 depends on your devout devotion to self-care right now.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Sometimes when a disheartening kind of darkness encroaches, we're right to be afraid. In fact, it's often wise to be afraid, because doing so may motivate us to ward off or transmute the darkness. But on other occasions, the disheartening darkness that seems to be encroaching isn't real, or else is actually less threatening than we imagine. Novelist John Steinbeck described the latter when he wrote, "I know beyond all doubt that the dark things crowding in on me either did not exist or were not dangerous to me, and still I was afraid." My suspicion is that this is the nature of the darkness you're currently worried about. Can you therefore find a way to banish or at least diminish your fear?

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): "Some people, if they didn't make it hard for themselves, might fall asleep," wrote novelist Saul Bellow. In other words, some of us act as if it's entertaining, even exciting, to attract difficulties and cause problems for ourselves. If that describes you even a tiny bit, Pisces, I urge you to tone down that bad habit in the coming weeks—maybe even see if you can at least partially eliminate it. The cosmic rhythms will be on your side whenever you take measures to drown out the little voices in your head that try to undermine and sabotage you. At least for now, say "NO!" to making it hard for yourself. Say "YES!" to making it graceful for yourself. ●
